THOUGHTS OF A MEAN, ROTTEN KID

by Don Fioto

Mickey Mouse is a dirty rat
And Donald Duck's a quack
Little Boy Blue was a big redskin
Snow White was really black

Disneyland's been rated X
Mother Goose is no more
Cupid doesn't know about sex
Shirley Temple was a great big bore

Mary, Mary, quite contrary,
Was a stripper of great renown
Little Jack Horner sits in the corner
'Cause he's a moron and clown

Peter, Peter, Pumpkin eater,
Was a meat and potatoes man
Don't ever trust an honest John
'Cause he's really a dirty Dan

Good ol' Dick Tracy is a crooked cop
Superman's a dirty old man
The Shadow is really that thing on the wall
Boston Blackie's in the Ku-Klux-Klan

Frankenstein's something doc whipped up
King Kong is really a queen
The Wolfman eats like an animal
The Creature is no Mr. Clean

These are my feelings about these things
They're feelings full of pizzazz
If you don't like them or don't feel the same,
To you I give the ol' razz!

NEW ROLE FOR MICKEY!

FAMED MOUSE ENTERS POLITICAL RAT RACE

By Margaret Bennett

Hollywood (AP)—Mickey Mouse today stepped off the celluloid and formally announced his candidacy for the presidential nomination in 1972. "I am the only candidate who can—and will—get this country out of the hole," Mouse declared.

Mouse's announcement came as no great surprise. The tremendous success in the political arena of fellow movie luminary, Ronald Reagan, clearly indicated that the time was ripe for the most beloved performer of them all to hop on the political Silly Symphony wagon.

The veteran performer was completely at ease before the microphones and cameras as he delivered his prepared statement and good-humoredly fielded questions from the press in his distinctive high-pitched voice. "Since more and more politicians are becoming cartoon characters, I see nothing unusual about a cartoon character becoming a politician," he told the 180 reporters who had gathered.

The familiar wiry figure with the oversize ears was dressed in his well-tailored red pants and the immaculate gloves that have long been his trademark. Still lean and with not a strand of gray in his glossy black hair, Mouse could easily be taken for half his admitted 44 years. It was obvious, despite Mouse's attempt to play down the entertainer image, that he still has the easy charm and animal magnetism that made him a household word in this country.

In enumerating his qualifications for the office of the presidency, Mouse emphasized his understanding of the problems of business gathered from his years as president of his successful watch manufacturing firm.

He also pointed out that he has an extensive background in foreign affairs, having served for many decades as America's unofficial good will ambassador abroad. "I am probably better known overseas than any other living American," he stated, "and I am more popular than God."

Asked if as president he would be willing to sign a rat control bill, Mouse earnestly responded, "I would not allow my background as a life-long rodent to interfere with carrying out the will of the people and enforcing the law of the land."

On the touchy question of Vietnam, Mouse was firm and unequivocal. "I am neither a hawk nor a dove," he stated flatly. "I believe we should neither get out nor escalate. We should continue just as we are, following what I think can with justification be called a 'Mickey Mouse' Vietnam policy."

Aided by an efficient team of image makers, Mouse undoubtedly knows what he is doing. Those who consider him politically naive and an amateur may have forgotten that a few years ago this charismatic personality—probably with an eye to elections still twelve years away—had an almost fanatical following among young people. Most of these former "Mouse-keteers" are now of voting age and their adulation for their former leader has in no way diminished.

The opposition, despite their repeated harpings on his lack of experience and their continual jibes of "Do you want a man or a mouse in the White House?" are becoming aware of Mouse as a serious threat. Political pollsters are discovering that even in the most remote areas of the country, because of TV reruns of his early cartoons, the boyishly engaging, perpetual "good guy" Mouse is universally known and loved, whereas the names Muskie and McGovern elicit only blank stares.

But what is even more significant in the presidential polls is that when the voters who supported Nixon in '68 are asked if they intend to vote for him again in '72, the answer being heard with ever-increasing frequency is "I'd vote for Mickey Mouse!"

MICKEY MOUSE FOR PRESIDENT

Boxing is becoming less physical and more verbal all the time. The last Ali-Frazier fight had more talk than action, both before and during the fight. Their rematch next Spring might very well become just a battle of insults. Like for instance this mouth-to-mouth account of...

THE NEXT

ROUND ONE

The fighters come at each other cautiously. Frazier feigns an insult at Ali, and Ali counters by calling Frazier the poor man's Sonny Liston. Frazier throws three short insults about Ali's robe and follows it with an ugly remark about Ali's trainer. Ali is stunned and meekly calls Frazier an Uncle Tom at the bell. We called this round even.

ROUND TWO

Frazier bores in by calling Ali a theatrical freak, a powder puff and a ballet dancer. Ali dances out of range and tells Frazier he has dandruff and bad breath. Frazier is stunned and blatantly calls Ali a draft dodger. Ali appears hurt but comes back quickly with two nice insults about Frazier's singing career. At the bell Ali calls Frazier an uneducated gorilla. We gave this round to Ali.

ROUND THREE

Frazier continues to jive in and feign with misguided insults. Ali wards off three remarks about his floating style and tells Frazier he can't sing in tune. Frazier imitates Ali's style and calls Ali "Clay." This bothers Ali and he heatedly tells Frazier that his I.Q. is 3. Frazier says Ali doesn't have an I.Q. at all and Ali counters by remarking about Frazier's heavy legs. Both fighters mix it up nicely mouth to mouth at the bell. We called this round even.

ROUND FOUR

Frazier is tiring now and rushes Ali without thinking of anything to say. Ali says Frazier ought to fight in the Bronx Zoo. Frazier says Ali learned to fight from a paperback book. Ali hurls a remark about

Your mother wears Army shoes!

ALI-FRAZIER FIGHT

NO PUNCHES – JUST INSULTS

as reported by HOWARD TAYLOR

Frazier's beard and follows it up by calling Frazier an overstuffed middleweight. The bell rings and Frazier makes a nasty remark about Ali's mother. The referee takes the round away from Frazier for a low blow. We gave this round to Ali.

ROUND FIVE

Ali is shaken by the low blow remark about his mother and Frazier looks for the kill by telling Ali his father is a bootblack. Frazier calls Ali "Clay." He calls him "Clay" again. Frazier calls Ali "Clay" twice more. Ali is clearly hurt. His lip is starting to sag and he grabs the ropes for support. Frazier hangs a beautiful insult on Ali about being a Muslim. Ali manages to swing away and timidly calls Frazier's trainer a slob. At the bell Ali has to be helped to his corner. We gave this round to Frazier.

ROUND SIX

Ali's trainer has been feverishly administering readings from the Insult Book between rounds and Ali looks like he's recovered. Ali throws three insults at Frazier about his children. Frazier insults Ali's grandmother. The referee warns Frazier about butting. Frazier now insults Ali's wife. Ali's wife jumps in the ring and hits Frazier. Frazier's wife now jumps in the ring and kicks Ali. Frazier's wife throws a right hand to Ali's wife's chin and follows with a nifty left uppercut. Frazier's trainer throws water in Ali's face, then kicks him in the stomach. Ali's trainer knocks Frazier's wife down and jumps on top of her. Frazier's trainer tries to strangle Ali and his wife with a wet towel. The police rush in to break up the melee and the fight is called off. We gave this round to Ali, Frazier's trainer and the two wives.

The End

Yeah? Well
your father sells 'em!

It used to be that New York City had only one kind of legal gambling—the Stock Market. Today there are legal racetracks, lotteries, bingo games and the newest addition—Off-Track Betting. If this keeps up, New York City may soon look like another Las Vegas. Only with a slight variation. Instead of the ordinary dice games and blackjack tables, New York could clean up a fortune if it ran more distinct games—new games geared to the times—games with the particular flavor of the big city. Like, for example, these...

OTHER GAMBLING GAMES FOR NEW YORK CITY

Script by JOE CATALANO

Art by TONY TALLARICO

HOTEL-KNOCKING ROULETTE

This is a game similar to Roulette, in which a wheel is spun giving a room number in a certain hotel. Players must bet on what will be in that room when the door is opened unexpectedly. For example, say it's Room 1305 at the Statler-Hilton. Will it be: 1) vacant; 2) have a honeymoon couple; 3) be filled with illicit lovers; or 4) have a welfare family at $186.50 a night. Winner gets the money and the room.

RATE-A-MUGGING

In this game everybody throws a dollar into the pot. A player (or victim) is selected and placed at the entrance of Central Park at 1 A.M. in the morning. Bets are placed on whether that player will 1) come out unharmed (a long shot); 2) lose his wallet (a 10-to-1 bet); 3) lose his arm (an even-money deal); 4) not come out at all (here YOU give the odds.) You keep rotating until all the players have gone.

SUBWAY CAR-GUESSING

Here's a fun game that takes you back to the good old days. As a subway train pulls into a certain station during the rush hour, a TV camera projects the most crowd-filled car onto a huge screen nearby. Each player must guess the number of people squashed into that car. Those within a thousand or so usually win. This game can also be played with autos stalled on the Long Island Expressway each Sunday noon.

STRIKE-A-LIKE

Here's another fun game in which the stakes are high, as well as most of the players. The way it works, there's a Betting Board on a table which lists every known Labor Union in the city. Players must guess which of those city unions will be the next to go out on strike. It must be a full-fledged walkout, "sick-out" or "work slowdown" only pays even money. The game is over when the whole Board is on strike.

ELEVATOR DRAG RACES

All the elevators in a large office building open their doors at the top floor. At the sound of the gong, the elevators begin their descent. The first elevator to reach the ground floor and open its doors is declared the winner. Players who bet on that elevator win the money. The last elevator to make the descent has to turn in its license. This will be the first time in the city that "descent" really pays off.

"I got drunk last night and did what?"—Paul Revere

PORNO-BINGO

Each player gets a card with a list of stores and movie houses selling pornographic magazines and showing obscene films. The game is played like Bingo, only instead of calling numbers the caller yells out the names of stores and movie houses as they are being raided. The first person to get five raids in a row wins. There is a Free Space, but this can only be used for places that have been tipped off beforehand.

520 East
42nd Street!

STRIP-A-CAR POKER

All the players, after putting five dollars into the pot, have to guess how long it will take a gang of car thieves to strip down a stolen car. Those closest to the actual time win all the money and get to keep the body of that car. If the thieves fail to strip the entire car, the police are called in, the thieves are arrested, and a new car-jacking gang (complete with fresh stolen car) are brought in.

WALL STREET LEDGER

This game can only be played during a down-market. The players place their bets and try to guess into which lane on the street a suicide-jumping executive will land on. Should a body fall into more than one lane the body is revived and has to jump again. Likewise, if the jumper falls out of bounds. At the end there is a Daily Double in which two executives jump at once. You bet on who lands on top of who.

ODE TO

Script by FRED WOLFE

When Armstrong stepped upon the moon.
The Earth looked like a huge balloon,
Not just a ball, as Columbus stated,
'Cause all upon it is inflated.

Throughout the supermarket aisles
Frowns take the place of housewives' smiles,
Can't buy those steaks or cheese or spices
With super-high inflated prices.

That once dull bloody slice of liver
Is priced to give your spine a shiver,
And lamb chops favored by the girls
Now cost more than a string of pearls.

To get some meat upon a bone
You have to float a three-year loan,
For pork and ham there are no rules,
You're forced to hock the family jewels.

All luxury items have to go
In this age of inflated dough,
Instead of eating caviar
You settle for a Hershey bar.

With grocery prices running riot
The nation's on a Nixon diet,
The situation's getting biggy—
Kate Smith now looks just like Twiggy.

Fred Wolfe to create a poem about it, price, that is! And so, for what it's worth, here is our ...

INFLATION

Art by JOHN COSTANZA

You step into a clothing store
And instantly you find you're poor,
The price leaves egg upon your faces,
Come in for shoes—wind up with laces.

To thieving landlords it's a joke,
It's you who gamble—go for broke
Their sleight-of-hand is really tragic,
The rent it doubles just like magic.

The doctors prove that crime can pay,
They take your pulse and yearly pay,
With wonder drugs they go to town,
Your wallet's swelling soon goes down.

If hospitalized you're really lost,
Another Taj Mahal it costs,
A dollar for an aspirin pill,
The headache starts with doctor's bill.

But Washington is not dismayed,
They're brave as hell—it's you who've paid,
They claim there's really no inflation—
Just dollar bills with constipation.

The nation's health they will restore,
Yet you keep paying more and more,
Soon a buck will buy you zero—
Dick's unafraid: "I'll just blame Spiro!"

"Help! Lemme outta here!"—Harry Houdini

With so many young people growing moustaches today, a new problem has arisen. Namely, what to do about all the clods who keep asking you while you're in the middle of growing it: "Are you growing a moustache?" Now, the only way to handle these stupid come-ons is with snappy come-backs. And so, we have compiled this list of sure-fire retorts which plainly tell you...

What to say when they say: ARE YOU GROWING A MOUSTACHE?

as created by JOHN DROMEY

- "No, I just forgot to shave my upper lip for the last six weeks."
- "No, I inhaled some liquid fertilizer and my nostril hairs are getting longer."
- "No, my contact lenses slipped and it just looks that way."
- "No, I carry my wife's extra eyelashes there in case she loses one and needs a spare."
- "No, I'm just carrying it for a friend."
- "No, it's really a beard but you know how inflation is."
- "No, I'm trying to smuggle a caterpillar past a flock of robins."
- "No, it's just an eyebrow that can't stand heights."
- "No, and don't tell me I forgot to remove the toothbrush again!"
- "No, that's just lint off my mohair ski mask."

SPECIAL SICK TRIBUTE:

COMEDIAN OF THE MONTH

PROFILE:

LENNY BRUCE

“Lenny Bruce” Candy

LENNY BRUCE is the one comedian who deserves this special SICK accolade. After all, he was the one who started it all. He was the world's first genuine bona-fide "sick" comic and he paved the way for "sick" comedy of which this magazine is a part.

Today there's a big Lenny Bruce revival. A successful Broadway play, a motion picture, several biographies and a reissue of his early recordings are keeping his legend alive. Youngsters are discovering him and oldsters have rediscovered him. It's now accepted that Lenny Bruce was years ahead of his time. His material seems fresh today. His perceptive wit still holds up in the "now" generation. On the following pages is a tribute to Lenny Bruce, both the man and the social commentator...

The LENNY BRUCE Story

LENNY BRUCE was born on Long Island some 40 odd years ago. When he was five his parents were divorced and his father, Myron Schneider, got custody of the child. Times were bad and the elder Schneider barely eked out a living working in his brother's shoe store in Freeport, Long Island. And so Lenny had to be constantly farmed out to relatives.

Even as a child Lenny was a mischief-maker. Relatives refused to keep him in their homes for long and he was shuttled back and forth constantly. Thus, World War II was a blessing for him. He enlisted in the Navy, though underage, and served nearly three years on the cruiser Brooklyn. Lenny participated in the landings at Anzio and Salerno, and finally escaped from tedious stateside service by posing as a homosexual.

After the war, he drifted around aimlessly until he was introduced to the world of small-time show biz by his mother, Sally Kitchenberg—known today as Sally Marr—a local nightclub MC and comedienne. For the first time in his life he felt he "belonged."

Lenny's first big break came in 1949 when he won recognition on the Arthur Godfrey Talent Scouts Show by doing standard impersonations with a German accent. After that he began touring the smaller clubs all over the country.

In Baltimore he met and married a stripper named Hot Honey Harlowe. When they were divorced, he received custody of their one daughter, Kitty. Together they played the club circuit, until he branched out on his own and began attracting attention in the "hipper" clubs of Frisco and the Village with his "avant-garde" material.

When he died on August 3, 1966, in a hilltop house on the Sunset Strip of California, Lenny Bruce was already a legend. His obscenity trials were front-page news and his style and brand of comedy were being imitated all over the country. "Today he is even bigger as now we all see the 'truth' of this man, Lenny Bruce will live on as long as there's a social consciousness about, and a sense of humor to go with it..."

"Sitting ringside are two boys in show business who got their start... in the windy city—the wonderful Loeb and Leopold."

"If Nathan Leopold had any sense of humor, he would have grabbed another kid when he got out."

On mine cave-in: "Get away from there, kid, quit kicking dirt in the hole!"

"If you like foreign cars, we gotcha little Fuzzvutten here—this is a German car that was used a little bit during the war taking people back and forth to the furnace."

My sister wanted to marry a doctor but my mother said no. I can't understand it. He was the only black doctor in Freeport, Long Island.

My mother-in-law broke up my marriage. What happened was, my wife came home and found me in bed with her.

'Please applaud loudly, Helen Keller is in the audience.'

"Let's have a big hand for the lovable Adolf Hitler."

"All right, Junior, comb your face, drink your blood, bite Mamma good-night, and go to bed."

Newark: Talk-about-towns-so-tough-that Dep't. A local school teacher got this note: "Please excuse Johnny for being absent—for twenty years!" And on the bulletin board of the local Post Office here: "$5,000 Reward for information leading to the arrest and conviction of anyone!"

Denver: A leading scientist recently injected a parrot with gorilla glands and got a 400 lb. bird. Now when it speaks it says, "Polly wanna cracker... NOW!"

Times Square: You Gotta Have Heart Dep't. One of New York's Finest recognized a little old lady in the street recently. She was ill, broke, despondent and had nowhere to turn. Now this cop took pity on her. He remembered her from the old days when she was the town nymphomaniac. So he put her in the Old Men's Home.

Hollywood: Marriage on the Rocks? When a famed actor was asked if he ever talked to his wife while making love, he replied: "Only if there's a telephone handy."

New York City: Pollution problems. The smog is getting so bad that when one mugger told his victim to get his hands up he had to ask: "Are you sure they're up?"

Washington, D.C.: Inflation note. In these high-priced times even words have changed their value. Nowadays an after-dinner mint is what you need to pay the restaurant check.

Chicago: When a local playboy sobered up the morning after his wedding he immediately filed for divorce, giving as his reason: "She's so ugly, it takes a Polaroid camera a whole hour to develop her picture!"

Arizona: Man's best friend? A sports fan brought his dog back to the pet shop for a refund. It was a Boxer—and it kept throwing every fight.

Oregon: A noted conservationist berated a lady for wearing a fur coat by saying: "Some poor little animal had to suffer to give you that." To which she replied: "That's no way to talk about my husband!"

International Press: A reporter claims to have seen the following sign in front of a house of worship: "If You're Through With Sin, Come In." And written underneath in lipstick was: "If not, call Gloria at Regent 3-4462."

Maine: Ralph Nader just bought a faulty truss, and is suing the company for non-support.

California: Politicians are now considering a bill that will permit prisoners to have female companionship in their cells. This is bound to create a big problem however—convicts breaking in!

Hawaii: An American tourist was arrested at a hula contest recently when he was found smuggling a lawn-mower under his coat. Seems he didn't see the sign "Keep Off The Grass!"

Texas: A foreman on a large ranch fired one of his hands for being a cow-puncher. Seems he keeps punching them in the mouth!

Paris: In an effort to tone down violence in the teaching of French history, grade-school students are now told that the burning of Joan of Arc was just a cook-out that got out of hand.

the TV HABIT

by MARGARET BENNETT

(illustration by JACK SPARLING)

If you are among the millions of enslaved Americans who daily pollute their minds and weaken their bodies with excessive television viewing, and IF YOU HONESTLY WANT TO QUIT, this article is for you!

The first thing you must realize is that there is no easy method of breaking the habit. All successful cures require a monumental amount of willpower, and no one can do it for you. There are, however, a few methods of control that have proved helpful to others, and one of them may work for you. They are:

1. The Cold Turkey Method

—An example of how this works is the case of Mrs. R. F. of Stockton, California, who spent the entire day of Wednesday, March 4, 1967 chain viewing. Without a pause she switched from "The Today Show" to a Jackie Gleason rerun, to two hours of mid-day serials, to an old Deanna Durban film, and so on through The Lawrence Welk Show and Johnny Carson and right up until the last station went off the air. (Occasionally she absentmindedly turned on an additional set and found herself viewing two programs simultaneously.) At the sound of the closing commercial on the latest "Late, Late Show," Mrs. R. F., overcome with self-loathing at how she had spent almost twenty-four hours of her life, snapped off the set and announced, "I have just quit TV. That was my last program." And she has not seen one since. Though this method requires the greatest strength of character, it has also been responsible for the greatest number of cures.

2. The Tapering Off Method

—The viewer calculates the number of programs he watches in a day—say 35. On the first day he watches his regular quota, but the next day he foregoes just one program. On each succeeding day, he views just one less program than on the previous day until he is down to zero on the thirty-sixth day. The pitfall in this method is that as the programs become fewer and fewer, the addict clings more and more to those that remain, indulging in constant program fantasies during the nonviewing periods. A Mrs. L. J. of Denver reported that using the tapering off method she developed such a Huntley-Brinkley fixation that she ultimately had to seek professional help to rid herself of it.

3. The Substitution Method

—In this method the victim attempts to alleviate his craving for television by substituting for it some other gratification, such as hi-fi or motion pictures. The danger, of course, is in choosing a poor substitute. For instance, one man attempting to give up TV had music by Muzak piped into every room of his house. After six months of "Tiptoe Through the Tulips" and "Bibbity Bobbity Boo," he developed symptoms of physical, mental, and emotional deterioration far worse than anything ever brought on by his previous addiction to television.

4. The Out Of Sight Out Of Mind Method

—This is often effective because it pits one weakness against another. The television set is hidden away in some inaccessible place as far as possible from an electrical outlet. When the viewer wishes to see a program, he must with great expenditure of energy wrestle the set out of its hiding place. One drawback of this method, however, is illustrated by the case of K. R. of Cape Girardeau, Missouri. He was well on the road to breaking the vice's control over him, ably assisted by his 200-pound color portable. One evening, however, when he was dragging it down from its spot behind two old steamer trunks in the attic, he slipped a disc. He was forced to go into the hospital and remain for treatment. While he was there in bed, some well-meaning charitable organization went through the wards distributing television sets. Mr. R's viewing habits not only returned, but were solidly reenforced.

5. The Blank Cartridge Method

—With this system the viewer does everything

"Can you lend me some money, I'm a little short!" —Mickey Rooney

he normally would—looks up the program in his TV log, turns on the set, finds the channel, makes all the adjustments, turns on the TV lamp, settles into his TV chair, puts his feet on the hassock, and munches his TV dinner or TV snack with his eyes fixed on the screen. The only difference here is that the set is not plugged in. This enables the viewer to enjoy all the pleasurable sensations associated with television without running the risks of actual viewing. One gentleman in Bismarck, South Dakota, who wanted his wife, a chronic viewer, to break the habit, secretly began pulling the plug out of the wall before he left for work every morning. Each evening when he came home, he would ask her how TV was that day. "Oh, fine," she would reply with her customary vagueness, "just the same as usual." After a month he told her what he had been doing, and she was delighted to learn that her addiction had been cured in such a painless manner.

Whatever the method used, those who have been successful in breaking the habit are unanimous in saying, "It's the greatest thing that's ever happened to me. I get more sleep now, my work has improved, I enjoy my food more since I stopped watching during meals, and I've lost those unsightly red-rimmed viewer's eyes which used to embarrass me."

Those close to the reformed viewer are equally pleased. One happy wife whose husband quit expressed her satisfaction in this manner: "It got to the point that I didn't want to kiss John. The very air around him was heavy with stale commercials. But, now," she said with a blush, "we're like newlyweds again."

You, too, can join the liberated ones. All it takes is determination. Whenever you start to weaken, think how it will feel some fine Sunday evening when, at a social gathering, your host turns to you and says, "Would you like to see Ed Sullivan?" and you hear yourself replying, "No, thanks, I don't watch TV—gave it up several months ago."

I know
it's crazy,
Doctor,
but all I want to do is watch TV a whole night!

Sorry, dear, but that's out too! I just heard a news bulletin... the grave-diggers just went on strike!

MOVIE REVIEW:

This time out we review a movie that just set a new record at the box-office. Namely, from the number of people who stayed away! This is because people passing by think it's a story about mad dogs. What else, with a ridiculous title like ...

THE WILD ROVERS

by FRED WOLFE

Talk about violence! Shooting! Lynching! Tar and feathers! No, this doesn't happen in the picture. It happens after the picture, when the management refuses to refund the audience's money! This is the story of two guys who ride tall in the saddle—until the blisters break on their backsides.

William Holden and Ryan O'Neal are cast as Ross Bodine and Frank Post. They make their living punching cows—and occasionally slapping a few bulls around. They work very hard for their money and are careful not to

"Not a mop, stupid, you need a shovel for that!" — Ed Sullivan

What are we pulling for, idiot, there's nothing at the other end!

They were darn good cowboys until they decided to become cowgirls ...

spend it foolishly. They give every cent they make to Mother. Mother runs the local saloon, gambling house and Rent-A-Girl Service.

Bodine and Post work for a rich cattle baron named Walt Buckman (Karl Malden) who was recently thrown out of the local Country Club for changing the name of his exclusive ranch to the Bar Mitzvah. Buckman comes from the old mold. And that's a pretty good description of him—old and mouldy. Even though he is loaded, he makes everyone in his family work, including his wife, who he has string barbed wire—as a necklace!

Buckman started out with only a few cows and now, after working thirty years, has over twenty thousand head of cattle. No bodies, just heads. But although money keeps rolling in, Buckman's wife complains bitterly about keeping all that cattle—especially in the living room. However, Buckman can't help admiring that beautiful spread. Not on the ranch—on his wife's middle. He is content just to ship his bulls all over the country. In fact, he is known by everybody as the biggest bull-shipper in the West.

How many cattle do I have? Wait, I'll count the legs and divide by four!

One day a ranch-hand named Barney Drago is stomped to death by his horse, after giving him a lump of sugar. Nobody knows what made the nag go wild, until they remember that the sugar cubes were given to them by a passing traveler named Timothy Leary. Post and Bodine are put in charge of funeral arrangements and are asked to take the body to the distant town of Maiden—a town so named because it's right in the middle of virgin territory.

Because of this death, Post and Bodine become philosophical about the shortness of life and figure they're never going to get rich busting broncs. And so they decide to stop horsing around and agree to go into the banking business together — with masks and guns. They figure that as bank robbers, even though they might get caught, at least they'll get their picture in the papers.

At first they think of slipping the teller a personal note, but decide he might get the wrong idea after noticing the queer way he always rides around town side-saddle. Instead, they hold the bank manager's wife hostage until he opens the safe and brings them the money. The bank manager takes a long time making up his mind after looking at his homely wife, but finally agrees. He figures he can always murder her later on and collect the insurance anyway.

And so when he brings them the money, Post and Bodine almost get a double hernia. This is because the bank manager brings them over sixty thousand dollars—all in pennies! Worse luck is soon to follow when a mountain lion rips open Bodine's horse, forcing Post and Bodine to ride together. They do this by holding each other around the middle, one behind the other. All goes well until they happen to run into a group of "gay caballeros." Needing a second horse badly, they visit a Civil War veteran named Black Ben to get one of the mules he raises on his ranch. To repay kindly old Uncle Ben they give him an invaluable piece of advice. Namely, give up raising jackasses and start raising Converted Rice instead. The rest is history.

The two cowboys are now off to Mexico, with Uncle Ben's words ringing in their ears: "Don't drink the water!" The boys aren't as dumb as they look though. They know that if they do drink the water they'd be able to out-run any posse! It seems however, that the posse from their home town has given up the chase. But Post and Bodine are now being pursued by Buckman's two sons, Paul and John, who are the two weirdest kids of all. What other kids do exactly what their fathers tell them?

Wanting to make a lot of time—both away from the posse and with the girls in the next town, our two blundering bank robbers now look for faster transportation than the mule Bodine is riding. Post spots a Mustang, but Bodine tells him he'd rather have a Cadillac. And so they settle for a wild horse they trap in a box canyon. They win this horse's confidence by showing him the center foldout of a lady horse in the cattleman's edition of "Playboy." They now head for Laramie, which they hear is a

Lose this broad, she's got longer hair than me!

"swinging" city. Turns out they're right. The first sight that greets them there are three guys swinging from trees!

claims Post had eight aces up his sleeve. Which is ridiculous since he's only wearing a T-Shirt. Nevertheless, Post starts shooting up everything in sight including the gambler, the bartender, a call girl waiting in a phone booth and, by the looks of the haphazard scene, the cameraman himself!

Post and Bodine are forced to go on the run again—having gotten a head start drinking gallons of prune juice. Bodine tries to cut the bullets out of Post and manages to make two very professional incisions in his friend's right side. Unfortunately, his friend

Your body is your home and should be kept immaculate. That's why I have a girl coming in twice a week to clean.

Psst, it's your husband. Act nonchalant, maybe he won't suspect anything . . .

In Laramie, the two start off their new high life by being rubbed down in the nude by trained ladies in a massage parlor. These girls really live off the fat of the land. Everything is going great guns until Post makes what turns out to be a fatal mistake, when he sits in on a poker game. At first, he makes a huge pile—which the handyman quickly cleans up. However, as he attempts to rake in a large pot, he is shot. Another player was shot on the left side, and so soon after he dies. Having buried his friend, Bodine now loses heart—which is shot out of him by one of Buckman's sons. This is after the boys' father was killed by a sheepherder, who is also killed. Now all this is in keeping with the general tone of the movie—which plays like it was put together by a writer, producer and director who were all half-shot to begin with!

MER'S ILIAD

for today's Poetry Lovers

Text by FRED WOLFE

Art by JOHN LANGTON

There once was a Helen of Troy
Who ran off with a cool Trojan boy,
Name of Paris, and these two
They made a real boo-boo
Let's proceed to what happened at Troy.

Menalaeus, who was Helen's lord,
He said: "Who took my red-headed broad?
I went out to get bread,
Paris raided my bed,
He'll be nowhere when I get my sword!"

Yes, Queen Helen, with her swinging hips
Made the Greeks launch their whole fleet of ships,
Horns on boats were all wailing
Their whole nation went sailing
Trojan radar showed one thousand blips!

Then the Greeks they proceeded to land,
Tents and blankets they pitched on the sand,
It was there some Greek smarty
Said: "Whee! A beach-party!"
Funicello (Annette) led their band!

Meanwhile Paris was having a ball
While the Greeks tried to scale Troy's big wall,
"Coward Paris!" they swore
When his draft-card he tore
What he switched to, you'd not fight at all!

So the Greeks built themselves a wood horse
That would throw all of Troy for a loss,
Soldiers inside that nag
Said: "Man, this is a drag!
But it's all for the Fuehrer, of course!"

Wily Greeks then pretended to cut out
So the Trojans thought that they would strut out,
Saw the steed on the sand
Said: "Wow! Horsey looks grand!
Would look better inside and not shut out!"

But Cassandra created a racket,
Said the Greeks would burn Troy and then sack it,
Troy would go up in smoke
'Less the Greek horse they broke
(They put Cass. in a strapless straight-jacket)!

So they pulled in this wood booby-trap,
Told Cassandra to close up her yap,
Said: "We can't see one Greek!"
Cass. said: "Soon, up the creek
With no paddle you'll be, you poor saps!"

Then they danced in the streets and did neck,
Troy was "Peyton Place" with discotheque,
Did the Frug and the Monkey
Man, those Trojans were spunky
Beat the Greeks (until they saw their check!).

That night when all Troy was asleep,
Out of horsey Greek soldiers did creep,
Opened up Troy's great gates
Seems the guards had late dates
The Greek army roared in on their jeeps!

The rest is sad history, my friend,
Everybody got stabbed (in the end!)
Helen went back to hubby
Menalaeus, the tubby,
And to heaven poor Paris he wend!

But some Trojans escaped from this rout,
Hunted one guy North, West, East and South,
Then they cut off the head
Of that dumb clod who said:
"Never look a gift horse in the mouth!"

ART DEPRECIATION

In the early days of publishing, when photo reproduction was inadequate for mass reproduction, newspapers sent out artists to cover news stories with on-the-spot sketches. Wouldn't it be logical to assume that some of the masterpieces of the day were originally illustrations of topical events, like these—

COPS POSING AS WOMEN TO STOP CITY MUGGINGS

'Operation Decoy' Goes Into Effect

Due to the ever-increasing number of women who are being molested right on our city streets, police from all precincts have started 'Operation Decoy' in which fellow officers disguise themselves as women in order to lure the muggers. Pictured above is one such disguised patrolman who last week brought in 13 men who tried to molest him. When asked how he attracted so many would-be molesters, the officer grinned and replied, "Idunno, maybe it's my smile."

WOMAN REFUSES EVICTION NOTICE

City Fails to Oust Recluse, 86

A stubborn old lady who wouldn't give her name had housing authorities in a dither today by refusing to move out of her condemned apartment in order to make way for a slum-clearance project. The woman, last tenant left on the block of seedy tenement buildings, was believed to be waiting for her son to come to her aid. Every attempt to communicate with the woman has failed as all she does is just sit there whistling.

FRUIT STORE LOOT TURNS UP IN BRONX

Robbery Still Baffles Police

The loot of a recent fruit store holdup that had been baffling police for several weeks turned up today in a seedy uptown hotel lobby. A fingerprint on a tangerine was the only clue to the identity of the thieves, believed to have abandoned part of their loot while making a getaway. Efforts to obtain further fingerprints were foiled however, as detectives handling the goods found they got paint all over their hands.

UNDERNOURISHED GIRL FOUND ABANDONED

Shapely Teenager
Malnutrition Victim

A wide-eyed teenage girl was found today in a complete state of shock allegedly brought about by a severe case of malnutrition. Doctors examining the attractive pony-tailed redheaded beauty reported that her entire body was growing out of proportion from the apparent lack of food. The girl was rushed to a local hospital and treated for an elongated neck condition believed to be a direct result of her experience.

IRATE PARENTS FORCE SHOTGUN WEDDING

Traveling Salesman Marries
Farmer's Daughter

The angry farmer parents of a shapely blonde farm girl forced a fast-talking traveling salesman into marrying their daughter at the point of a pitchfork today as neighbors cheered wildly in approval. "Ain't no durn city fella gonna do wrong by my Mary Lou," the father was quoted as saying while the bride giggled merrily throughout the ceremony. The groom, however, was in less jovial spirits as he glared nervously at the steel-bladed pitchfork, obviously missing the point of the whole thing.

FOLKSINGER DEFIES POLICE ORDER TO MOVE FROM PARK

Cops Haul Eccentric to Jail

More defiance to the police edict banning folksingers from congregating in the city parks came to light yesterday as an unidentified old guitarist refused to move and kept right on strumming. It was rumored that the man had been living in the park since 1907 but this report was unconfirmed. He was carried away bodily by two policemen right in the middle of "John Henry," continuing the song in a padded cell at the State Hospital where the above picture was taken.

BUSBOY GOES BESERK IN CAFETERIA

Hurls Dishes At Patrons

A crazed busboy went beserk late yesterday during the crowded dinner hour in a downtown cafeteria and began throwing plates of food at terrified customers who stared at him open-mouthed. When police arrived the screaming madman had ripped off all his clothes and was running amok through the dairy section taunting fellow workers with a sizzling hot plate. "Can't understand it," said the manager, "he just flipped his disc!"

VANDALS DESECRATE PARK STATUE

"Indecent" Shout
Outraged Viewers

A gang of teenage hoodlums viciously, and with no apparent motive, desecrated a statue in the park late last night in what was described as an act of "savage barbarism." Missing from the statue were the two arms and a sheath of carved stone which had formerly covered the bodice. Residents of the area are urged not to try to apprehend the vandals as they are carrying arms.

STRANGE COUPLE FOUND LIVING IN SUBURBS

Neighbors Complain To Authorities

THE SLEEPING GYPSY

An itinerant folksinger and a strange brooding lion shocked the otherwise placid surroundings of a small New England community late yesterday by setting up house-keeping together on the slope of a nearby hill. "It looks like the scene of some strange, eerie nightmare," was the report of one observer who witnessed the bizarre sight. Neighbors have already petitioned to the Zoning Commission, fearing that real estate values will go down.

POLICE BREAK UP WILD JAZZ PARTY

NAB 3 FAR-OUT MUSICIANS

Acting on complaints from neighbors, police broke down the door of a well-furnished third-floor apartment last night and found a bizarre jazz party going on. The musicians were clad in unbelievably grotesque costumes and were too intoxicated to give their names. "I've never seen such a sight in all my life," commented one of the arresting detectives, "it's like some weird Picasso painting."

HOLLYWOOD STARLET TRIES WILD PUBLICITY STUNT

Disrobes in Park, Arrested

A young Hollywood starlet landed in the hoosegow today after disrobing in the middle of a crowded downtown park as spectators looked on in horror. The girl, an attractive redhead with long flaming hair, is having her name withheld pending notification of next of kin. "I was only trying to get the part of Venus in a new picture," cried the shapely beauty as she was seized by 13 policemen and carried away.
